PLENARY PRESENTATION

- 8:30 to 10:00 AM PLENARY 1: COURTS AND ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE: THE DIGITAL REVOLUTION AND CYBERJUSTICE

Professor Gary Marchant, Regents Professor of Law; Director of the Center for Law, Science and Innovation
Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law, Arizona State University

Professor Marchant frequently speaks about the intersection of law and science at national and international conferences. He has authored more than 130 articles and book chapters on various issues relating to emerging technologies. Among other activities, he has served on four National Research Council committees, has been the principal investigator on several major grants, and has organized numerous academic conferences on law and science issues. The phenomenal growth of technology over the last few decades has dramatically affected and improved both access to trial courts and their internal operations. Electronic warrants, online dispute resolution, e-judicial dashboards, virtual hearings, interactive websites, artificial intelligence, caseflow analytics, digital evidence, body cameras, and virtual self-help centers are only the beginning. As some court futurists have recently noted, "We are really technology enterprises that just happen to be courts." Professor Marchant will challenge our thinking and reveal how the high-tech / high-touch digital revolution will continue to impact courts in greater ways as the future unfolds.

10:00 to 10:15 AM BREAK

CONCURRENT WORKSHOPS: 10:15 to 11:30 AM

- Workshop 1: Balancing PJ / CEO Roles and Duties in Times of Crisis

Leading trial courts in good times is challenging. Leading them during or after a crisis (i.e., the pandemic, hurricanes, fires, tornados, floods, terror or cyber-attacks) requires blending PJ and CEO skills and cultures tailored to an environment of urgency, trauma and uncertainty. PJs have the organizational power but lack the operational knowledge. Court Executives have the knowledge but lack the power. The team approach melds these strengths.

Additionally, those who have studied effective leaders in such situations point to a short list of valuable key behaviors this two-person team needs to synchronize their effectiveness, including: seeking credible information; communicating frequently, truthfully and honestly with judges, staff and court users; functioning decisively (avoiding analysis paralysis and pinpointing "decision rights") while giving people opportunities to improvise better ways to operate; being present, visible and available to boost morale; building connections with frontlines to ensure an awareness of changing conditions, and strategizing closely with confidants – most importantly with the court's leadership team – on ideas, directions and action plans. This session will outline how these skills can purposefully be employed to help you as a leader when the unexpected occurs.

- Workshop 2: Judiciary Under Attack: Confronting Disinformation, Fake News and Online Attacks

Disinformation, fake news, and slanderous attacks on judicial officers and decisions made by them have been rising at an alarming rate. In contrast to the institutional independence guaranteed to federal judges by the Constitution, most state court judges are not so insulated from outside pressures.

In 38 states, local and state trial judges are popularly elected, a practice that is virtually unknown to the rest of the world. And because of Supreme Court decisions like Citizens United and Republican Party of Minnesota v. White, many are elected in heavily financed, often vitriolic campaigns – campaigns that literally invite pandering to special interests and portend built-in conflicts of interest once judges reach the bench. Not to mention the tenor of the campaigns themselves! All of this led Justice Sandra Day O'Connor to say that "the single greatest threat to judicial independence . . . is the flood of money coming into our courtrooms by way of increasingly expensive and volatile judicial elections."

Without question, the American court system performs a vital adjudicatory and final decision-making function for the American public, which necessarily includes politically-charged and emotional issues. Moreover, the impending escalation of the attack on the judiciary poses grave consequences if left unchecked. This workshop will explore what state and local judicial systems can do to address unjustifiable attacks on trial judges, the role of the judiciary in our tri-party democracy, and how trial court leaders can be part of the effort to mitigate unconscionable assaults on trial judges.

- Workshop 3: The New Future of Work: Harnessing Innovation, Defining the Next Workplace Era

The pandemic upended traditional service delivery models in courts everywhere. It radically changed how and where work was done. While not perfect, pivoting to remote work during the pandemic highlighted how courts are able to redesign work, use technology, and promote teamwork and collaboration, while simultaneously maintaining high levels of service and productivity. As courts reopen, court leaders are facing mounting pressure to reconsider, re-think, and re-design work arrangements in this new era of work. It's time to harness innovations and create the optimal mix of in-person, remote and hybrid work models for the future. How can you preserve your court's culture, and nurture trust and collaboration, no matter where employees work? What's the right blend for your court? How can a remote work policy be fair to everyone? How can your court harness the advantages and mitigate the disadvantages of remote work? These questions and others will be explored in this session.

- Workshop 4: Be a Data-Driven Court Leader: The Pathway to Smarter, Wiser, Sounder Decision-making

As a leader, you can always count on your own experience, intuition, and knowledge to make good decisions. But in today's information age, many presiding judges, court executives and their leadership teams are increasingly relying on analytical data to help guide court policy and operational decisions. Using the power of data, allows court leaders to have clearer, actionable insights into better ways to improve court services for customers, drive performance and accountability, and prioritize resource allocation. There is no learning without data, no feedback without data, and certainly no accountability without data.

This session will give you an insight into the usefulness of modern digital analytics in your work as a court leader. Today's case management software – whether purchased via a vendor or created locally by your court IT staff – is capable of providing statistical information in understandable, graphic, timely and meaningful ways. If that's not occurring in your court, decisions about caseload forecasts, operational performance, and overall transparency are apt to be constrained.

11:45 AM to 1:00 PM HOSTED LUNCH at the VENDOR EXHIBIT & COURT PRODUCT SHOW (HILTON ANAHEIM HOTEL)

1:00 to 1:30 PM OPTIONAL PRESENTATION: TYLER TECHNOLOGIES

PLENARY PRESENTATION

1:35 to 2:45 PM PLENARY 2: WAYS TO ADVANCE DIVERSITY, EQUITY & INCLUSION FOR JUDGES, STAFF AND COURT CUSTOMERS

Many court leaders today are developing programs and initiatives to end systemic discrimination involving race, gender, age, ethnicity, disabilities, or sexual orientation which may be embedded within the culture and operations of a judicial branch. While commitments to assess and evaluate levels of diversity, equity and inclusion in a court are important starting points, much can be done concurrently to improve the experience and opportunities for all working within courts or coming to them.

Examples of action-oriented programs include the Massachusetts Trial Court Office of Diversity, Equity, Inclusion & Experience charged with fostering an inclusive and just court system that provides a fair, respectful, and dignified court experience for court users and employees. The Office works with court departments to build capacity around issues of DE&I, diversify the court workforce, provide court DE&I training, establish inclusive policies and practices, and improve the court user experience. Oregon’s Judicial Branch provides another leadership example by training court leaders to conduct “difficult conversations” that allow the gathering of “factual experiences” about marginalized people working in or appearing before the courts; offering supplemental guidance to court security forces on inclusivity and responsive services to diverse court users; encouraging the use of tools to address vicarious trauma, mindfulness, and stress management in order to improve wellness for staff, judicial officers and court volunteers; and developing curriculum for staff and judges on procedural fairness to foster a more respectful and welcoming atmosphere within courts.

If there is any governmental institution that should clearly and openly embrace and model an organizational work culture based on treating people in a supportive, open, welcoming, and affirming manner where all can thrive and be treated with respect and dignity, it should, indeed, be a trial court.

2:45 to 3:00 PM

BREAK

CONCURRENT WORKSHOPS: 3:00 to 4:15 PM

- Workshop 5: Pretrial Release Services in a No Bail World

The Pretrial Justice Center for Courts (PJCC) at the National Center for State Courts, the National Association of Pretrial Agencies (NAPSA), and the American Probation and Parole Association (APPA) work closely with state and local courts to implement evidence-based risk assessments in recommending pretrial release conditions, the presumptive use of non-financial release conditions, and the development and modernization of pretrial release programs. They provide information and tools, offer education and technical assistance, and facilitate cross-state learning and collaboration.

The California courts recently secured funding for the development of pretrial release programs statewide. Many other states have or are instituting such programs either under the aegis of a court, state executive or judicial branch, or locally-controlled probation departments. These reforms, however, are not without controversy. Since human behavior is difficult to predict, even with evidence-based risk assessment instruments, public and political backlash has occurred in various communities when defendants reoffend while on release; some in very violent ways. Consequently, support for changing laws and policies to make it easier to keep violent criminals behind bars pending trial has surfaced in some areas of the country. In New Mexico, as an example, legislation was introduced this year to create a “presumption of dangerousness” category for defendants charged with certain violent crimes — a presumption defense attorneys could rebut with evidence and mitigating circumstances.

Consequently, developing effective pretrial release programming is a work in progress. This session will explore how the criminal justice system is evolving ever more sophisticated methods to assess risk, monitor defendants released, reduce jail overcrowding, and protect the public.

- Workshop 6: Survive. Recover. Restart. Justice and Jury Trial Delay Post-Covid 19

Two and one-half years after the American justice system was paralyzed by a pandemic, the repercussions continue to radiate through communities nationwide, from tiny towns to the largest cities. Although the shutdown in case processing caused serious delay in the work of trial courts initially, most courthouses are now back in action, even if not yet at pre-pandemic capacities. Justice delayed by Covid-19, however, looks to continue to be a feature of the American landscape for the near future.

Criminal jury trials account for most of the pending backlog nationwide, although delays are somewhat uneven. States that reopened more quickly than others will likely reduce a decent portion of their logjams by the time the NAPCO Conference convenes in August 2022. Many state and local trial courts, however, are expected to still have lengthy delays. A survey by Thompson Reuters released in August 2021, found that the average backlog in state and local courts had increased by about a third.

This session will explore best practices in reducing backlogs, including techniques that create more meaningful pretrial proceedings occasioning early plea agreements, prompt discovery exchange, timely motion hearings, and speedy case dismissals. Methods to promote greater jury trial efficiencies will be explored as well.

- Workshop 7: Better Customer Service through Race and Implicit Bias Training

This workshop explores a unique training program developed by the Massachusetts Trial Court that supports and strengthens better customer service through purposeful, structured discussions on how the biases of court staff and court users may affect interactions among them. A training program is facilitated at all courthouses and helps to identify challenges that staff, particularly on the front line, face while trying to meet the needs of the public. The goals of the training are to: (a) increase awareness of how biases influence the ways we engage with others, (b) build capacity toward improving the experience of court users, and (c) empower court employees to identify solutions to workplace challenges.

- Workshop 8: I'll take 'Collaboration' for $1000, Alex. The answer is: "Magic." The question is: "What happens when subject matter and court educational experts combine efforts?"

Courts around the country face challenges in training judicial officers and staff about the subject matter that is to be mastered for recently appointed judicial officers or those who are being assigned to a new judicial rotation. The model most commonly employed involves a multi-day in-person classroom approach. Information overload is the norm and actual absorption (learning) is limited. While meaningful training for judicial officers needs a new approach, the silo effect between subject matter experts within courts and those who develop court-initiated educational programs has limited their abilities to meet the objective.

Over the past two years, the Maricopa County Superior Court has created an innovative, interactive computer-based product for judges who are new to family court. It's called "Family Court Kingdom Quest." Based on a Game of Thrones theme, it has 11 modules. The final product, launched in February 2022, has been immensely successful.

The workshop presenters will use the actual program to illustrate its features and provide a series of take-aways you can apply in your jurisdiction, including ways and objectives in rethinking judicial training, techniques for developing and creating more helpful training programs, and how to facilitate collaboration between subject matter and training/education experts to create cutting-edge training programs for judicial officers.

OPTIONAL EVENING SOCIAL EVENT AND DINNER

Marconi Museum

The Marconi Museum, home to one of Southern California's most iconic automotive collections, is the site of our social event and hosted dinner. It is located a short distance from the hotel in Tustin, CA. The Museum operates as a public, nonprofit corporation with a portion of all net proceeds from organized events transmitted to local charities serving children-at-risk.

Southern California's car culture has dominated the American automotive scene since the 1940s. Whether you're into classic American cars, hot rods, or the new electric car revolution, "SoCal" has set the pace. Much of the nation's current architecture and transportation patterns developed in direct response to drive-thru curbside service, freeways and road trips. Join us for dinner and a look at America's influential car culture, including three of the most original movie and television cars... the Batmobile (1989-92); the Dukes of Hazard 1969 Dodge Charger; and Knight Rider's 1982 Pontiac Firebird Trans Am conversion.

PLENARY PRESENTATION

8:45 to 10:00 AM	PLENARY 3: HAPPINESS @ WORK: WHY AND HOW COURT LEADERS SHOULD AND CAN INSPIRE IT

Science has shown that people who are happier at work are more committed to their organization, rise to positions of leadership more rapidly, are more productive and creative, and suffer fewer health problems. More and more, research is suggesting that happiness should not be an afterthought for workplaces; it should be an essential goal, entwined with the kinds of 21st century skills that are key to individual and organizational success today. But how can you as a court leader increase happiness within yourself and across the court?

This plenary presentation zeros in on the particular challenges—and opportunities—in bringing a greater sense of happiness and meaning to your life at work and to the lives of judicial officers and court staff. Insights from leading scientific studies will be distilled into actionable lessons. You'll not only be better equipped to identify the level of happiness within the court and help colleagues understand why happiness is a worthwhile goal, but you'll also be equipped to support engagement and productivity and strengthen your sense of belonging, purpose, meaning, and satisfaction—not only at the courthouse but in your life as a whole.

10: to 10:15 AM

BREAK

CONCURRENT WORKSHOPS: 10:15 to 11:15 AM

- Workshop 9: Successful Approaches in Justice to Dealing with Homelessness

Unfortunately for too many, the experience of homelessness involves police encounters, lockups, courts, or jail and prison cells as much as it does shelter beds. Some people are caught in a revolving door between the streets or shelters and jails, not to mention other institutional settings. Federal, state, and local policies have focused on specific subgroups, such as veterans, people experiencing "chronic homelessness," and, more recently, families and youth. In many communities, these efforts have been useful in bringing together new partners, galvanizing public and private support, and shaping public awareness of what it takes to end homelessness.

We are not doing enough to solve the structural causes of homelessness--lack of affordable housing, wage stagnation, the wealth gap, institutional racism, and inadequate health and social services for people living in poverty. Court leaders are in a unique position as the principal conveners of justice and private system partners to address the current problems in many communities, as well as marshalling the forces to prevent homelessness in the long-run. This workshop will help PJs, CEOs, and trial court leadership teams examine this multi-faceted problem and learn about practical, proven approaches to dealing with it.

- Workshop 10: Eliminating Peremptory Challenges in Jury Selection: An Update on Arizona's Groundbreaking Venture

On January 1, 2022, Arizona became the first state in the nation to eliminate peremptory challenges, the ability of attorneys or parties to object to selecting a proposed juror without stating a reason and without the court's approval. Under a new Arizona Supreme Court rule, potential jurors can only be excluded for cause such as acknowledged or determined bias related to the participants or circumstances in a case. The new rule supports a growing body of research and data that reveals peremptory strikes often discriminate against people of color in state and local jury selection.

Arizona has a national reputation for modernizing jury practices. In the 1990s, numerous far-reaching changes were undertaken as experiments including encouraging juror notebooks and notetaking, allowing questions of witness by jurors, promoting case specific jury instructions, and permitting jurors to discuss the evidence privately among themselves as the case proceeds. Some of these changes have been adopted in other states. As in the past, jury reform is again on the move.

- Workshop 11: Storytelling: The Art and Science of Engaging People as a Leader

Storytelling has been around for thousands of years. From ancient cave dwellings to the latest webinar series, stories have both fascinated and motivated humankind. Stories have always been a highly helpful tool to communicate a message, idea or principle. This is why the art of telling a thought-provoking story is an essential leadership skill in today's world as it has been in times past. Through storytelling, leaders can emotionally connect with others, inspire organizations, set strategic visions, clarify ideas, and teach important lessons. Proper and engaging stories have the potential to change a person's attitudes, values and beliefs, and even their behavior. Storytelling, with a purpose, is key to being not only a good leader but a more impactful one. This workshop will give you some tips on improving your effectiveness as a leader through more skillful and thoughtful storytelling.

PLENARY CLOSING PRESENTATION

11:15 AM to 12:15 PM PLENARY 4: LEGACY LEADERSHIP: LIVING YOUR PURPOSE. LEAVING YOUR MARK. REINVENTING YOURSELF.

Most leaders don't think about their legacy until they are approaching the end of their careers. Today, whether you've just become a court leader or have been in your position for a while, this session will give you a brief opportunity to look at your leadership journey and consider the legacy you want to leave – your indelible mark – on the careers and lives of those you lead, your court, the justice system, and the public you serve. "The greatest use of a life is to spend it for something that will outlast it." (William James).

Once you've had a chance to reflect on your impact as a court leader, we'll talk about what's next for you. How might you reinvent yourself for a new future? Nothing stays the same forever. In a world where things are always changing, sometimes you have to think about who you are and where you're at – and figure out whether it's time for a refresh. Join us for some thoughtful, personal introspection.
